BOROUGH COUNCIL FIXES TAX RATE AND AWARDS CONTRACT

Tax Rate Fixed at Same Figure
As Last Year, $1.35 per $100
Assessed Valuation

GARBAGE CONTRACT

Council Receives Two Bids;
Accepts One $300 Lower Than Present Figure

Borough council last night fixed the tax rate the same as it was last year, 1.35 per hundred dollars of assessed valuation and awarded the contract for the collection of garbage to a new contractor at a saving of $300 per year and at a figure which was $600 below the other bidder.

Richard Winslow, chairman of health and sanitation committee, informed council that the committee had advertised for bids for garbage collection and had received but two bids. J. Ostrowski, who at present holds the contract and who has been the successful bidder for a number of years, put in a bid of $2100. Louis Hroski bid $1500.

The committee submitted both bids to council without any recommendations and the contract was awarded to Hroski. Ostrowski at present receives $1800 for the work. After the bids had been received Ostrowski informed the committee he had made a mistake and that his bid was intended to have been $1800, as at present.

The appropriation ordinance was presented by Clarence Winter, chairman of finance committee and it was passed upon first reading. Upon motion the rules of council were suspended and the ordinance was taken up for second reading and final passage.

The ordinance provides for the expenditure of $61,800, exclusive of the amount required toward the interest and sinking fund on the bonded indebtedness.

Police committee reported no arrests during the month. Two were discharged, four held for court, two fined and one committed.

Seven incandescent lights and two lights were reported out during the month. One hundred and sixty-six warrants were given accommodations overnight.

The sum of $50 each was appropriated to Bracken Post and the Sons of Veterans toward the expenses of the observance of Memorial Day.

Councilmen absent were Morris, Schmidt, Fallon, Spezzano and Howard.

Meetings of Interest To Schoolmen Are Planned

Plans are being made for another meeting of the directors and teachers of the ten public school districts located north of Doylestown, to be held on Thursday evening, April 25th, at eight o'clock in the Springfield Township high school.

In order to allow any vital problem to be brought up for discussion at that time, it has been decided to conduct this meeting as a panel discussion, to be arranged and conducted by county superintendent J. Harry Hoffman.

There is also being arranged for a meeting of the members of the Emergency Education Council and the principals and superintendents of Bucks County public schools, this being planned for Friday next at three p. m., at the office of superintendent Hoffman, Doylestown. At that time there will be discussed plans for appropriate projects to be put into operation in the various communities during the summer season. N. T. Ruark, county supervisor of educational projects, will meet with the group.

DIRIGIBLES BUILT ON PLAN OF SUSPENSION BRIDGE ARE SEEN AS A SOLUTION TO NAVY AIR NEED

New Construction Plan To Be Tested in United States
Soon

By Leon W. Shloss
(I. N. S. Aviation Writer)

WASHINGTON, Apr. 9.—(INS)—The dirigible, as a war machine of aggression or defense, is only beginning its career, rather than finishing it.

This is the consensus of opinion in official and military circles here and in aviation manufacturing quarters throughout the United States.

It is generally agreed, however, that sweeping changes in design are essential before the airship can become as useful for military purposes as it has been successful in the commercial field.

These changes, as proposed by one outstanding aircraft construction concern, are being considered by military experts in the light of the prospective demands that will be made on aircraft when, and if, war again engulfs the world.

When the World War started, the development of aircraft was in its infancy. Airplanes were limited in range, slow in speed, and restricted in carrying capacity. The great bombing planes of today, with speeds exceeding 200 miles an hour, weren't even hoped.

The strides that have been made in the 17 years intervening is epitomized by the following statement, made before the Federal Aviation Commission by one of America's leading aviation experts:

"An enemy bombing squadron could fly from 1,000 miles away from our seacoast, at a speed exceeding 200 miles an hour, at an altitude exceeding 30,000 feet, and in passing over New York City could destroy the buildings of lower Manhattan from the Battery for perhaps a mile northward."

A dirigible, or fleet of dirigibles, could transport 20 fighting airplanes each, at 100 miles per hour, for 12,000 miles, without refueling. These dirigibles could be protected from attack by long-range rapid-fire guns, of larger and more deadly calibre than attacking planes could possibly carry.

Defensively, these ships, coupled with commercial dirigibles transformed into fighting units, could not only patrol the areas surrounding the great centers of population, but could establish and maintain a defense line 1,000 miles out to sea.

These metamorphosed commercial ships could transport 20 planes each, have a 100 m. p. h. speed, and a cruising altitude of 20,000 feet. Cruising at this altitude, scouting planes could be dropped to contact enemy planes. When such planes were contacted, the scout could direct the dirigible's course to intercept this enemy force.

This accomplished, the dirigible could release a fleet of attacking planes.

If any doubt is felt concerning the air as the theater of the next war, consider that three great, far-seeing nations, have provided their citizens with gas masks in large numbers, and instructed the population in the use of them, it is pointed out.

How, other than from the air, could lethal bombs or gas be loosed on such cities as Berlin, Moscow and Tokio? Fulfillment of all these activities by dirigibles, in the event of war, depends, it is agreed, on the perfection of the airship to preclude occurrences similar to the Shenandoah, Akron and Macon disasters.

To many, the tragic ends of these giants has proved that, however efficient the zeppelin-modeled dirigible has been in commercial service, the rigors of military maneuvers are more than their structure can withstand. A stronger, safer airship must be designed. Many plans for righting whatever defects were responsible for past failures have been devised. A summary of one that is receiving serious study currently follows:

Construction of dirigibles on the principle of the suspension bridge, which has been demonstrated to be

DUST STORM MENACE

Mountainous Seas Whip
Breakwaters; Airplanes
Are Grounded

By International News Service

NEW YORK CITY, Apr. 9.—Death rode the whirlwind today as gales whipped the coastal boundaries of the nation. Airplanes were grounded because of inland dust storms, while men fought for their lives aboard a sinking ship in the icy Atlantic.

New disasters struck on the heels of Spring tornadoes. Nature's latest freak took hold of western and eastern seaboard alike. From the Sacramento Valley in California came reports of a death toll ranging from nine to 14 persons when a Southern Pacific freight train collided with a motor railway car of a section gang, which had been repairing the damage caused by the worst California storm in years.

Eight other persons were known to be dead in swollen rivers, and traffic accidents throughout the state, while another man, a judge, was reported missing.

The freighter, S. S. Badagry, a British steamer, reported herself in distress off the coast of Newfoundland. The hold of the stricken vessel was filling rapidly.

While icy gales and mountainous seas whipped against the eastern breakwaters, dust storms hovered over the western plains in New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming and part of Nebraska.

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 9.—Howling winds with gale velocity whipped this city and environs during the night, and early today, leaving in their wake widespread property damage.

One death was attributed to the storm, the tale end of a northeaster which lashed the New Jersey coast.

Charles McLaughlin, 35, died early today in a hospital of a cerebral hemorrhage suffered last night when he was felled by a gust of wind in the center city district.

The storm which lashed the Jersey coast was particularly heavy in Mammouth Bridge, Seabright, Manasquan, Belmar, Long Branch and Point Pleasant.

KINDNESS TO ANIMALS WEEK BEING OBSERVED

Week Was Suggested By A
South Carolina Man; First
Celebrated in 1915

MUCH ACCOMPLISHED

Humane Sunday, two days ago, ushered in another Kindness to Animals, or Humane Week. This is possibly the most outstanding movement in all the vast work done by organizations working for animal protection since the founding of America's first S. P. C. A. by Henry Bergh, New York City, in 1866.

The Week was suggested by a South Carolina man, Henry Lewth, and first celebrated in 1915. Various are the ways of observing it, among them are programs in the schools, poster contests, special exercises, pet shows, and other celebrations. Churches, Sunday Schools, newspapers, radios and others help to make this week a success. And special proclamations are made by Governors of many States.

Should the question be asked, "Why a Kindness to Animals Week?" anyone sufficiently interested to make inquiry of any of the larger S. P. C. A.'s will get a surprise at the report such an

WEISS' ALLEGED SLAYERS PLEAD FOR NEW TRIAL

Attorneys for Both Farrell and
Wiley Argue Nine Reasons
To the Court

AWAIT THE DECISION

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 9.—The convicted slayers of William (Big Nose) Weiss, Philadelphia dope racketeer, who was kidnapped, shot to death and tossed into the waters of the Neshaminy Creek near Croydon, are now awaiting the decision of Judge Calvin S. Boyer, before whom their lawyers yesterday pleaded for a new trial.

Martin Farrell and Frank (Babs) Wiley, were convicted on March 2 of murder in the first degree and were given the death penalty. After Judge Boyer's decision on the appeal is handed down, the two men will be sentenced if a new trial is not granted. If a new trial is refused, the case will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

Not only friends but brothers-in-law as well, Farrell and Wiley who escaped from the Eastern State Penitentiary last July through a sewer manhole, stuck together during the trial in the Court of Oyer and Terminer of Bucks county recently, but yesterday, for the first time, it became known that the two slayers are now "deadly enemies."

Wiley, whom Farrell saved from death while crawling through the sewer in the escape from the "Pen" when the former became exhausted and sunk, now says that Farrell was "yellow" in going on the witness stand during the recent trial and admitting certain things that the State alleged were in a confession obtained from him at New York after his capture.

"He is yellow," Wiley said about Farrell yesterday to police. "If he would have kept his trap shut, they could not have convicted us, or at least, there might have been a chance."

Fourteen pounds lighter than he was at the time of the trial Farrell appeared in court yesterday as an entirely different character when he "posed" in court during the trial with an air of bravado, smiling time and again as District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn questioned him. Yesterday he nervously bit his fingernails as he listened to Webster S. Achey, Doylestown, Wiley's counsel, and John P. Betz, Jr., Bristol, his own attorney, present their arguments to the Court.

Defense attorneys argued nine reasons to the Court yesterday, including six additional reasons that were filed after the three original reasons had been filed. From time to time Judge Boyer commented on the reasoning of the lawyers for the two convicted killers in a way that gave Farrell and Wiley little hope of a new trial.

The defense submitted the following reasons for a new trial:

"The Court erred because it permitted the defendant Robert Eckert to testify as a witness for the State (Eckert is to be tried at the May term for the same offense). Eckert being jointly indicted with Farrell and Wiley and not having entered a plea and was therefore incompetent to testify against his co-defendants.

"The Court erred in refusing the defendants' sixth point for charge which was, 'if the jury believe from the evidence that the witness, Eckert, was a confirmed opium user, and that the influence thereof impaired his recollections or intellect, his testimony is not entitled to any weight.'

"The Court erred in permitting the confession of Farrell to be introduced in evidence, it being shown that the confession was not voluntary but was obtained by threats, duress and mistreatment."

The additional reasons filed for a new trial were as follows:

BUCKMAN REFUSES TO QUIT COMMISSION AT GOV.'S REQUEST

Request Motivated By Political Reasons, Writes Bucks
County Senator

BEEN ACTIVE 25 YEARS

Furthered Movement for Construction of 16 Bridges
Across Delaware

By International News Service
HARRISBURG, Apr. 9.—Expressing the belief the request was motivated by political reasons, Senator Clarence J. Buckman, Bucks County Republican floor leader, today flatly refused the demand of Governor George H. Earle, that he resign as a member of the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission, of which he has been president for the past five years.

The resignation was requested by the Governor in a letter from H. Kalodner, his secretary, last March 29th, under a ruling from the Attorney General's office dated June 13, 1927, which declared a member of the General Assembly was ineligible for appointment on the Commission.

Senator Buckman wrote that at the time of the ruling he was advised by the Attorney General's office his membership was "entirely proper" and the opinion applied to merely future appointments of new members.

Asserting he had spent more than 25 years of his life in furthering the movement for the construction of 16 bridges over the Delaware River north of Trenton, New Jersey, Buckman wrote the Governor:

"It would therefore seem to me that your request that I resign from this Commission, which has been my life work, must be motivated by political reasons to secure for your administration the patronage under this Commission, consisting principally of bridge police and laborers, or to coerce me to support your burdensome and unnecessary tax program whereby you seek to assess upon the people of our Commonwealth additional taxes for the next biennium in the sum of $203,000.000.

"I therefore respectfully refuse to be coerced or to tender my resignation as requested in your letter."

Referring to a meeting of the Commission at his Philadelphia Office on Friday, March 29th, when he was appointed chairman of a committee to go to Washington and apply for $3,000,000 in Federal funds to construct a new bridge over the Delaware River between Easton and Phillipsburg, Buckman pointed out:

"I presume that in view of your letter suggesting my resignation, I shall have to cancel these appointments."

Buckman in his letter to the Governor also expressed the hope the executive would not follow the recommendation of the Secretary of Highways Warren S. VanDyke that the bridges at Lumberville and Point Pleasant be closed and the traffic be diverted to the Stockton Center bridge. The closing of these two bridges would result in irreparable detriment to the communities of Bucks County, the Senator asserted.

FINGERPRINTING

Washington reports that fingerprinting is on the way to become fashionable. Of course, we all remember how John D. Rockefeller, Jr., submitted to the process not so long ago.

And now it is stated that thousands of civilians are voluntarily adding their identification marks to the files of the record division at the capital. Civilian prints thus volunteered are placed on a special non-criminal file. They include many hundreds of prints of children who, because of the family's position, are in danger of kidnapping.

Still, all this voluntary submission to a process of filed identification, does not necessarily mean acquiescence to the suggestion of compulsory fingerprinting. To be sure, plans to that end have been discussed but the average American does not readily adhere to the notion that he should be required to identify himself to government authorities, police or otherwise. He feels that it is an infringement upon his liberty and a reflection upon his probity of conduct.

And that feeling is not softened by the fact that, although no country today has a compulsory fingerprinting law for all citizens, bureau officials point out that prints may be put to many civilian uses, although the system started as a means of identifying criminals.

IDEAS

The first hundred ideas are the hardest!

After the first hundred ideas, which means the first hundred indications that the mind is doing a little thinking on its own account, not merely listening in, the process of thinking becomes easier.

There are men that live and die without ever having what really may be called an idea of their own, and there have been men, with one single idea, have done more for the world and for other men than the millions of ordinary men with ordinary ideas could do in a whole lifetime.

Among the weakest of all the created animals, man had just one thing in his favor. He could think, and by forming ideas he has lifted himself from the misery and degradation of the cave man to everything that man possesses and everything he is today.

If a man cares to take the trouble, and thinks success and achievement worth while he can lash his brains into real productivity. Brains, like horses, must be driven, and the reason so many brains never accomplish anything is because their owners are too tired to drive them.

With many people the trouble is not too little thinking but no thinking at all. The fact that the idea of a few can do so much for all mankind does not excuse the many that drift through life allowing their brains to remain idle and non-productive, like money hidden under the floor, drawing no interest.

You can say this for the older type of radio static: It was non-political.

Marriage is like a movie. It merely seems a flop because the advance notice had you expecting too much of it.

The whole psychology of door-to-door brush peddling is that the householder will think it is Opportunity knocking.

"THE COLD FINGER CURSE"

by EDWIN DIAL TORGERSON

SYNOPSIS

The crowd had gathered as usual at June and Jimmy Kirkman's place at Two-Sixty-Eight Waverly Place, habitat of artists and their ilk. Among them were St. Gregory Valcours, pseudo artist, Roger Duane, a specialty dancer, and dignified Douglas W. Coulter, the only non-artistic person in the house. They are awaiting the arrival of wealthy Mrs. Charles Elderbank, who has just purchased the house next door. Valcours says Mr. Elderbank, who is sixty-two and twenty years his wife's senior, lives in Canada and approves of her going around with a chap named Merriam. Jimmy notices a stranger watching the house and Valcours says "It's a process server looking for me, I'm not here." Violet Elderbank and her handsome escort, Price Merriam, arrive. Unknown to Violet, Merriam was really employed by her husband to guard her. Because of her penchant for jewelry, Elderbank feared for his wife's safety. Violet invites the whole crowd to her house-warming. When she and Merriam leave, Valcours walks to their door with them. As Valcours is about to return home, Detective Stranning emerges from the shadows and arrests him. Some valuable paintings were stolen from an exhibit where Valcours had gone with a batch of his monstrousities. A guard remembered seeing him with an armful of canvases and for that reason he was questioned, but later released. Thurber and his fiancée, Marjorie Clarken, visit Valcours to get his story about the arrest, but Valcours swears them to secrecy because of his patrons.

CHAPTER VI

Glenn told Marjorie good-bye with the promise that he would call for her at seven.

The party at Mrs. Elderbank's was distinctly under way, however, long before that hour.

Many guests arrived early for cocktails, Violet having sensed the advantage of getting them warmed up in advance—particularly the cohorts from next door. It was confessedly a mixed affair, which was quite what Violet desired. The word had gone forth that people were to wear what they jolly well liked, and only about half of those who came were in evening attire. Fritz Runkel, who had been designated an official master of ceremonies on behalf of Two-Sixty-Eight, wore rough tweed knickers, a white sweater, and a Basque belt perched on the side of his head. St. Gregory Valcours was attired inevitably in his velvet coat and flowing tie. Jimmy Kirkman and his wife wore smocks, and the others who were expected to pose as Typical Artists for the up-town folk affected various other degrees of studio attire.

Violet, who had not wished the responsibility of a full staff of servants, employed only a cook, a butler and two maids. This evening the cook and one of the maids had been excused, and for dinner Violet had called in a caterer's corps, who served a noble repast expertly and by ten o'clock departed without leaving a trace of their presence.

An orchestra discoursed dance music on the second or library floor, where two huge rooms had been thrown into one by opening the sliding doors between them. It was here that the authentic Zulu dance of Roger Duane and other diversions were to be given. Roger, however, after a careful daylight inspection of the big library chimney had decided to alter his plan of descending the flue for a surprise entrance. He might get stuck, he said, and the chances were he would be badly scratched in any event. It would be safer and just as effective, he decided, if he hid in the fireplace—it was concealed partially by a screen of palms and other potted plants—or in the flue directly above.

A series of stereopticon and floodlight effects for the dance had been rehearsed by Roger and Price Merriam, who was to work the machines. To give Roger an opportunity to hide in the chimney, it would only be necessary to blot out all lights for a brief time—long enough to permit him to hurry from his dressing room, a hall bedroom on the library floor, to the fireplace in the double room. They had timed this rehearsal and had found that one minute of darkness would be ample.

Violet made an effort to assemble all her guests on the library floor shortly after dinner, but this was difficult. People were all over the house inspecting its advantages. The billiard room in the front basement attracted many, others clung to the drawing-room on the floor above and still others evinced a desire to clamber to the roof, for here had been equipped a very comfortable and attractive roof garden.

The house had virtually been remodeled from roof to cellar, though it retained largely the general character of the original, one of the typical three-story and basement private dwellings of which New York has thousands, row upon row. It had been rendered distinctive, however, by a slight elevation of the roof, a new front of tapestry brick, a decorative entrance of Colonial persuasion, new windows and fanlights, and an unsparring expenditure upon interior refitting and decoration.

The basement or ground floor contained the billiard room in the front and the kitchen and butler's pantry in the rear. The parlor floor, to which the front steps led, consisted of the drawing-room, the adjoining dining room and a sun parlor in the rear. The second or library floor was comprised of the two exceptionally large rooms connected by folding doors, and the bedroom at the end of the hall which had been assigned to Roger Duane for a dressing room. The third or top floor consisted of three bedrooms. In the top floor hall an electrically operated staircase, which swung out of sight into the ceiling when not in use, served as a means of egress to the roof. Pressing a button brought it down or restored it to the ceiling.

The music at length attracted most of Violet's guests to the library floor, and after a period of general dancing she silenced the orchestra in order to clear the field for one of her celebrities. Violet was a lion-hunter and was not without her pets to-night. A soprano of the Metropolitan Opera sang an amorous aria from Samson et Dalila, a noted actor condescended to do Hamlet's Soliloquy, and a university professor who had written several snappy books discoursed wittingly about that subject on the subject of current literary trends. A much admired pianist played nocturnes of Chopin.

Before midnight, noting that the party was rapidly becoming riper and mellow, Fritz Runkel announced that there was to be a special session of the Greenwich Village Hysterical Society, to be followed by general rioting. There was a siege of semi-extemporaneous nonsense that lasted half an hour. Fritz had the entire company singing Rollicking Bill the Sailor, when the butler brought Violet information that Roger Duane and his musicians from the night club had arrived. They were a little earlier than they were expected.

"You have shown them to their dressing room?" asked Violet.

"Yes, madam," said the butler, "but they are already made-up. They came that way from the club."

"Very well, Cupples. Mr. Merriam will see to the rest. If anything is needed let me know at once."

"Yes, madam," said Cupples, and withdrew.

Cupples was a good servant, but not of very prepossessing appearance. He was virtually bald, but what was left of his hair proclaimed that his thatch had been red. His eyebrows were red and bristly, and his eyes, of a greenish-brown hue, were set too close together. Indeed he gave at certain times the appearance of being cross-eyed, and his eyes burned angrily then as though he sensed your thought and resented it. His features were professionally immobile but their expression was a trifle sullen. Violet had got him through an agency in the neighborhood—Mr. Elderbank had not been advised that she intended to employ a butler, or he might have sought the good services of the Montreal police as he had done in the selection of Violet's chauffeur.

Marjorie Clarken had overheard the butler's message to Mrs. Elderbank, and she punched Glenn Thurber in the ribs.

"If there's a diamond robbery and a double murder to-night," she whispered, "I'll know who did it. Why, he even looks crooked—he's cross-eyed."

"Great guns, gall!" fretted Glenn. "You keep looking for trouble."

"But, Glenn, I'm worried about Mrs. Elderbank. She's a shining target for thieves, with all that jewelry loaded on her to-night. And of all this mob in the house to-night I'll bet there are two dozen strangers she doesn't know from Adam's house cat."

"Well, it's her joolry. I wish it was mine. I'd sue for your hand in holy wedlock, and pay all court costs."

"Hush, foolish. Why doesn't she wear paste, if she simply has to dazzle everybody?"

"Maybe she does. I can't tell the difference."

"But I can. She's wearing the real thing. She showed me her pearls, close up. Ouch, but they're marvelous! And listen, Glenn—that butler's pig eyes are not the only reason."

"No? Has he got fallen arches, too?"

"This isn't funny. You know when you and I were up on the roof, just after dinner—when everybody was strolling around looking the house over?"

"Yes, I admit that much, officer." "You remember I went near the front parapet, while you and some other people were discussing the fountain statuary?"

"Yes, yes!"

"Well, I peeped over into the street, and I saw Cupples step down to the sidewalk and look up and down."

"Maybe he was looking for a taxicab."

"But there was a man hidden in a doorway across the street. He stepped out, looked up and down, then crossed the street quickly and walked past Cupples. Then Cupples evidently said something to him, and he stopped and walked back in the other direction. He had words with Cupples."

"Perhaps Cupples asked him if he had seen a taxicab."

"All right. He flippant, then. You wait and see. I've got a shiversy feeling about that fellow. He seems to try to sneak up behind people to hear what they are saying."

"He sneaked up behind me with a drink several times," said Glenn gratefully, "I wish he would ambush me again."

"You've had enough," declared Marjorie peremptorily. "Keep your wits about you. There's something going on here, and you mark my word. That's just the reason he has served so many drinks—he wants everybody cork-eyed."

Violet Elderbank came up to them, followed eagerly by St. Gregory Valcours, who was saying: "I could get them right now, Mrs. Elderbank. They're right next door. It wouldn't take me a minute."

"Very well, do so, then," assented Violet hastily. "Leave them downstairs in the drawing-room."

She turned with a slightly weary expression to Glenn and Marjorie as the importunate painter departed.

"Is he really," implored Violet, "an artist?"

"He's the Village Pest," said Glenn. "It's like him to try to sell a picture to a defenseless hostess. Shall I throw him out for you when he comes back?"

"No, let him live. I merely promised to look at his paintings. He has been trying to corner me for a discussion of art all evening. I suppose I must buy something to get rid of him. Having a good time, are you—both?"

"Marvelous," responded Marjorie. "More fun, more people killed! I never had such a good time since the hog ate up my little brother."

"You children!" laughed Violet. She looked about through the dancing throng. "Have you seen Mr. Merriam lately? I need him for the star feature of the program—Mr. Duane's dance."

Marjorie spied him. "There he is, in the rear, talking to Mr. Coulter."

I heard a wild goose yesterday

AT THE first "honk" I gazed skyward. There, high in the air, flew a patriarchal gander guiding his flock due north in perfect V-formation—Nature's advertisement that spring had really arrived.

And, speaking of advertisements, do you read those that appear in this newspaper? They forewarn you of the change of seasons just as surely as the first robin or the first golden daffodils.

Reading advertisements is a habit well worth cultivating. They tell you, well in advance, of the latest trend in styles. They keep you posted on this year's developments in automotive engineering. They bring to your attention new foods—nourishing, appetizing. They introduce to you marvels in household helps. They point out interesting locales for your vacation—or for tours that broaden your outlook on life.

The advertisements are interesting, helpful, reliable. By comparing the prices and qualities of merchandise advertised you buy to best advantage. You may rely on the advice given you by the advertisements in this paper just as you depend on the advice of a friend.

Discuss Rebuilding Of the Lenape Dam

tools, etc., in addition to about $6,000, for labor which would be furnished by the relief board.

The fact that the borough of Sellersville owns its stone quarry will aid materially in reducing the cost of the dam. Labor for the quarrying of the stones can also be obtained from relief works.

The present drawback to the plan is that the commission must get title to a tract of about twenty acres of land owned by the Lehigh Valley Transit Company. They are asking $6,000 for the land, which is on the east side of the creek and includes part of the site of the dam, which is to be rebuilt. Considerable discussion was devoted to this problem, and several plans were outlined, including popular subscription to raise the money, or condemnation proceedings.

There is also the possibility of getting aid from county commissioners, who already own two tracts of land on the project, which was purchased at a cost of $2500, since the commission has absolute authority over all monies raised by it, but can not incur indebtedness to Sellersville Borough Council, under which it operates. The land bought by the county must be devoted definitely to park purposes. The present area of the planned park includes sixty-five acres in the borough of Sellersville and almost twice that much in Perkaskie borough, and would link the playgrounds of the two boroughs, which are at opposite ends of the tracts.

It was felt at the meeting that a few dollars spent now on the park will bring in almost twice the amount spent in federal aid and labor, which may not be available again. It was also felt that if the councils of the two boroughs could be induced to guarantee interest in the purchase price of the Lehigh Valley tract, over a period of five years the money could be raised by the county commissioners, who already have a large stake in the matter, and the dam be built at once.

Mr. Sprengel was instructed to get the members of the Branch Valley Fish, Game and Forestry Association and the Chamber of Commerce of Perkaskie council in the matter.

TEN TEAMS WANT TO ENTER TWILIGHT CIRCUIT

It is most likely that the Bristol Twilight League will consist of eight teams this season. At a meeting of the league held in the Hibernian Hall last night, the matter was left up to President David Landreth to decide whether to have an eight or six team league.

Applications of ten teams for entry into the circuit were received. They were: Hibernians, Cubans, White Elephants, Tullytown, Newport Road Men's Club, St. Ann's, Young Italians, Knights of Columbus, Independents and Jefferson A. C. St. Ann's, Independents, Hibernians and the Jefferson A. C. have their franchises from last season. Damp Wash A. A. and the Edgely Braves withdrew from the league. The Braves are entered in the Lower Bucks County League.

During this week, President Landreth will interview the applicants for entry and then decide before the next meeting whether all the clubs will be able to post their forfeit fees.

Managers of the teams are: Newport Road Men's Club, Thomas Kenny and Jack Ritter; Tullytown, William Sweeney and Carmen DiCicco; White Elephants, Robert Hughes; Independents, Joseph Rubino; St. Ann's, Frank Sagolla; Jefferson, Felix Tomlinson; Knights of Columbus, Robert McCurry; Cubans, Earl and James Spencer; Hibernians, Marty Fallon.

There will be a meeting of the Lower Bucks County League tonight at the home of Jack Wolvin, Edgely. Only managers and directors of the teams are requested to be present.

Only Question of Time Until Democrats Split and employes, from public utilities and from utility patrons, from insurance companies and from policyholders, from producers of milk and milk distributors, from owners of amusement places and from theater-goers, from tobacco growers and manufacturers and from smokers, from gasoline users. Practically every phase of life and activity in the State has been represented at a score or more of hearings.

The outlook is for a breakdown of the whole Democratic program. The Republican Senate is standing firm and some twenty Democrats in the House are wobbling under pressure from back home and rubbing the sore spots left by the lashes of the Democratic bosses who drove them to vote for unpopular bills.

These Democrats are hopeful that some sort of a tax program substitute will be reached, so that they can escape from the criticism now being heaped upon them. Many of them were actually pleased when the Republicans in the Senate killed the gas tax, realizing that this brought a new tax plan that much nearer. The two Democratic Senators who voted against the bill actually had the support of a score or more of House Democrats in what they did.

The net result of all this is that when substitute bills are presented Democrats in the House will flock to them, regardless of their former votes, while many others are sincerely hoping that most of the more oppressive of the Administration's regulatory measures will be defeated in the Senate.

Dirigibles Built On Plan of Suspension Bridge Seen

the strongest structure known, in proportion to the weight of the materials used. After 60 years of severe service, the strength of the Brooklyn (suspension) Bridge remains the same as when it was built, as shown by recent tests.

In suspension construction, steel drawn into cables, is used. The tensile strength of this steel is 10 times that of aluminum alloy heretofore used in dirigible construction.

Tension, in the projected ship, is balanced and co-ordinated to resist stress applied to any part of the dirigible. It has been pointed out that it was rapidly changing, severe stress applied to different parts of the Akron and Macon by storms that caused those craft to "break up."

The frame of the "suspension bridge" dirigible is claimed to be elastic, yet more rigid than the zeppelin frame. Construction of one of these new-design airships is expected to enter the building stage soon. Upon its completion, the world may have the dirigible for which military authorities have pursued a search which has cost millions of dollars and hundreds of lives.

And the vast number of dogs and cats turned out, often dropped on a highway, to take care of themselves, or left at home when the family goes on its vacation—all these things one may learn about from an S. P. C. A.

What these organizations have accomplished since 1866, and the still existent need for protection work for animals must surely convince any humanely-minded person that in Kindness-to-Animals Week there is needed opportunity to plead the cause of justice for all the millions and millions of animals used by humans and upon which lives really depend.

"The Court erred in refusing defendants' first point submitted for charge which was, 'if the jury find that Weiss was shot and killed at a point more than 500 yards outside the boundary line of the county of Bucks, the Court is without jurisdiction and the verdict must be null and void."

"The Court erred in refusing defendants' second point for charge which was, 'if the jury find that Weiss was taken on a journey in an automobile from a point in Bucks county into Philadelphia county and at a point 500 yards beyond the boundary line of Bucks, and was shot and killed, and then brought by the same automobile back into Bucks county, and his body there thrown into the waters of Neshaminy Creek, the bill of indictment failing to allege such journey, then the verdict must be null and void.'"

"The Court erred in refusing defendants' fourth point of charge which was, 'if the jury find from the evidence that Weiss was not killed in the perpetration of a kidnapping, they cannot return a verdict of murder in the first degree.'"

"The Court erred in refusing defendants' eighth point for charge which was, 'if the jury believe from the evidence that the witness Eckert was a confirmed opium-user, and that the influence thereof impaired his recollection or intellect, his testimony is not entitled to any weight.'"

"That the Court erred in refusing defendants' eleventh point which was, 'under all the evidence the verdict must be not guilty.'"

"That the court erred in permitting the confession of Farrell to be introduced in evidence, it being shown that the confession was not voluntary but was obtained by threats, duress and mistreatment."

Other defendants indicted in the Weiss case will be tried at the May term of court, including Eckert.

Records Are Broken In Sales of Pontiacs

February broke factory production and retail records, of several years standing, it was announced today by A. W. L. Gilpin, vice president and general sales manager of the Pontiac Motor Company.

Production for the month totaled 16,327 cars which breaks all records for any single month since 1929.

Retail deliveries by Pontiac dealers amounted to 10,732 cars which establishes the month as the best February in six years.

The delivery figure shows a good increase over the 7,375 for January of this year and more than doubles the deliveries in February of 1934 which were 4,631 cars.

"There is nothing to indicate that this record-breaking pace will let up materially for some time to come," stated Mr. Gilpin. "The popularity of the standard six is increasing rapidly as indicated by an upturn of 18.2% in the number of unfilled orders on hand for standard six models."

"So that we may be able to take care of orders on hand with the least delay possible during March 18,500 cars have been scheduled for production during the month."

"A review of the export figures for January and February indicates the great improvement that is taking place in our overseas business. During the period 3,407 new Pontiacs were shipped to foreign countries which is greater than the total for the entire twelve months of 1934 when our export shipments were 2,918."

"Without any doubt the country is in a more enthusiastic buying mood than it has been for years. Money is coming into the marts of trade from many different avenues. Much of it, no doubt, is money that heretofore has been afraid to show itself. It has been out of circulation hiding in some strong box or in a bank account. "Of course, hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent that have been put into the buyers' pockets by Uncle Sam . . . either through farm relief, CWA, PWA, HOLC or a dozen and one other Federal agencies."

ARBON THREAT AT WEDDING

MADRID — (INS) — Villagers tried to prevent a wedding at Tomino, because they thought that the bridegroom, who was 45, was too old for the bride, aged 22. They locked the doors of the church and threatened to burn it down with the wedding party inside. Police arrived in time, and the ceremony was concluded in peace.
